Pastor Disappears -Turns Up As a Musician Guest Columnist

Lenny Tvedten, Director, Martin County Historical Society

Disappearances seem to make headlines and talking points in today's news media. However, this was also apparently true in the past. Back in 1905, there was an account about the then Mayor of Fairmont, William W. Ward, regarding a New York newspaper his untimely disappearance. After much conjecture on the part of the locals, including suspected sightings at a number of widespread geographic locations in the United States, he was finally located in Santa Ana, California, running a cigar store. Interestingly enough, in 1914, a Fairmont pastor also mysteriously turned up among the missing.

What was referred to at that time as a "baffling mystery" took place in mid-December of 1914, capturing the public's attention, as well as the attention of the national media. The subject of this disappearance was twenty-eight year old W. R. Burton, the pastor of a local church. He was married and the father of a four year old boy. On December 15th, 1914, he was said to have boarded an eastbound Milwaukee train to preach at a funeral in Austin. Upon establishing the fact that he never arrived in Austin, there ensued wild speculation and gossip, including scandalous stories, as to his disappearance and whereabouts, all of which eventually proved to be

Ten days after his disappearance, Burton's wife received a letter from him stating that he was "fully aware of his condition, and that he would seek relief in a sanitarium, the location of which he did not disclose." It was also later discovered that, prior to his disappearance, he had been taking treatments for a "nervous condition" that he was fearful of, and that idea as to how he had from the church, conjeche had a mania in which ended up in New York. printed a story about how Burton had, while suffering from amnesia, enlisted as a musician in the U.S. Navy under the name of ed to athletes and that his Richard Hudd at Key West, Florida, on December 26th, 1914. The newspaper account further stated that he had been transferred to the Navy Yard in Brooklyn and had been living at the YMCA since January 2nd, 1915. It went on to describe Burton's collapse after which he was hospitalized. The article stated that on January 10th, a man in the afternoon throng of Fifth Avenue onlookers clapped his hands to his head, uttered a cry, and collapsed on the sidewalk of 42nd Street. After being taken to the hospital, unconscious, his identification revealed that he was Richard Hudd, a musician with the U.S. Navv. and that he was waiting for a uniform and assignment to a ship's band. In fact, the name Richard Hudd was actually his given name; however, he had adopted the name of Burton from his stepfather, who was his mother's second husband. In addition, the New York Times sent a telegram to the Fairmont Postmaster requesting information about Burton. It read, "Rev. Walter R. Burton found here with memory gone, enlisted in Navy. Please wire at once at our expense the story of his disappearance."

When the unconscious Mr. Hudd, aka Pastor Burton, opened his eyes, he said: "Where am I, why am I here, and what happened?" Burton had no As to why he resigned and subsequently enlisting in the Navy.

Although an athlete, Dr. Iones felt he was not of the physically strong construction usually attributtemperament was decidedly feminine. So much for patient privacy in 1915.

After eventually obtaining a discharge from the Navy, which took several weeks, he encountered more problems in that he was then unable to locate his wife. She, apparently, had gone to the home of a sister in Boise, Idaho, following his disappearance. She was later found to be at the home of another relative. Finally, Burton returned to Fairmont, was reunited with his family, and his congregation was very supportive in unanimously asking him to come back to serve as pastor at his church. He continued his ministerial duties until the fall of 1915 when he and his family left for Idaho, presumably on a vacation to visit his wife's family. However, while in Idaho, he resigned from his church in Fairmont, never to return. Burton's disappearance was given national publicity and his medical condition attracted the attention of some of the nation's most highly respected physicians and surgeons of that era. He was never able to fully explain how he traveled from Fairmont to Key West via Kansas City and then to New York as he had only $8.00 to $10.00 in his pocket when he left home, and a mere $1.33 in his pocket when found on the streets of New York. ture was that he could no explaining, and felt it better to go somewhere else and get a fresh start.

had one of those weeks you wished you could just forget about? That was my week last week. It was one of those weeks that you feel tested and events happen that kind of shake you to your core. I do have to say that luckily I didn't have any issues healthwise, but events took place that left me wondering what to do and who to turn to. Growing up in a family of 4 kids, my parents always told us that we could come to them whenever we felt lost with nowhere to turn. My sister Angie (yes, the "Redneck" one) reminded me of that and directed me to reach out to them. Sure shear and he was enough, just like when correct! we were kids, my parents were there with listening ears and understanding and helped get me fo-ave you ever cused on what needed to be done to correct the situations. It is something that in this age of "hustle and bustle" we in the "younger generation" seem to forget that one important thing. No matter what happens, your family is always there for you. It took this past week to remind me of that fact, so I leave you with this thought: You can always turn to your family!

We have a winner! Apparently I made the

Other activities include sand volleyball, bingo, kids inflatables, food stands, beer will be "Bordertown" and "Starfire". On Sunday, enjoy pork chops on a stick, petting zoo, kids pedal pull, music by "Heartsong" and the "BeeKays" and of course the parade at 3 p.m. Check out the ad and story in this week's Photo Press.

Thanks Dad! Before I go, I want to take this time to remind you that Sunday is Father's Day. It is a day we take to remember our fathers who have gone before us and to honor our fathers who are with us today. My Dad has been my role model from little on. # Hazelnuts, a crop with a future

By Jeff Jensen, Iowa Nut Growers Association

"We can grow hazelnuts the single most asked question I get when I talk to inhazelnuts in Iowa. I can't say that I'm surprised, and I'm not so naive as to think that many would know that hazelnuts are grown in Iowa, considering hazels probably represent less than a fraction of one percent of the landscape. So I usually shoot them a smile and explain enthusiastically that absolutely they grow in Iowa; both native American Hazelnuts and recently hybrid hazelnuts that have been bred using genitive material from organizations like Rural the American Hazelnut, Beaked Hazelnut, and the European Hazelnut.

sumers travel to the grocery store to purchase hazelnuts they are the large European Hazelnuts grown in the Pacific Northwest where the temperate climate is conducive to their survival. Grown as trees, hazelnuts in Oregon and Washington (most are found in the Williamete Valley region) are susceptible to a disease called Eastern Filbert Blight. Scientists at Oregon State University have done excellent work over the last several decades identifying genes that confer resistance to this fungal disease and have bred superior plants that are blight resistant.

Typically, when con-

However, this does not mean that we can grow these superior trees here in the Midwest. Not all EFB is the same, so the "variety" of EFB present in Oregon may be different than what is present in Minnesota long way to go; but progwhich is different from that ress is being made. When in Nebraska which is dif- I think back to 2006 and ferent than that found in my time traveling dusty New Jersey.

In addition, our colder winter temperatures in- about possible perennial crease the likelihood of crops I'm amazed at how plants either dying off or, woefully unprepared I was if they survive, the male catkins (pollen shedders) freezing off. Researchers at the University of Nebraska are investigating growing European cultivars in close proximity to native American Hazelnuts that could be a pollen source for surviving European trees. Stay tuned in the years ahead to learn if this theory is successful.

In contrast to the European Hazelnut, are the Hybrid Hazelnuts that are based on the native American Hazelnut and Beaked Hazelnut that are grown as multi-stemmed bushes and have a certain level of inherent resistance to the EFB found in our neck of in Iowa?" This question is the woods. By combining genetic material from the European, Beaked, and dividuals or groups about American hazels we are aiming to get a plant that grows as a bush, has thin shells and high quality kernels, and vields well over time.

> While much of this work as been going on for decades by amateur breeders in the Midwest trying to get improved plants, a more organized effort was started in 2007 by partners at the University of Minnesota, University of Wisconsin, their respective extension services, and non-profit Advantage, the Minnesota Hazelnut Foundation, and the Iowa Nut Growers Association.

> Under the umbrella of the Upper Midwest Hazelnut Development Initiative (UMHDI) research objectives have been identified, funding solicited, and work begun on "figuring out" several aspects of growing hazelnuts commercially in Iowa and the Midwest.

> Considering few named varieties are available, and no commercial plantings exist, we have a long way to go. However, superior plants have been identified, replicated field trials have been established in at least 5 locations in MN and WI, micro-propagation techniques are being refined, and development of Best Management Practices (BMP's) is underway.

> With a goal of developing a commercial hazelnut industry in the Midwest, UMHDI and partnering organizations have a gravel roads to talk with landowners and farmers and what little information I could provide them. Simple things like where to get seedlings that would survive, expected yields per bush, estimated price per pound for final product, and how to grow them were almost always answered with some combination of; "well we're not really sure right now but we are trying to figure that out," or "the research is underway, we should know in a year or two." Responses like that do not help growers make decisions about what to plant or instill confidence that the opportunity is real. This likely explains why most chortled or even openly laughed at the idea. Although several of those questions are still not answered definitively, I am even more confident and excited by the opportunity of hazelnuts as a future crop in Iowa and the Midwest.

Fresh Green Peas

By Linda Meschke, Rural Advantage

my favorite ways to prepare them is with creamed new potatoes. I've included a recipe below so you can try it this summer.

For pea lovers, there are three basic types of peas: shelled green peas, snow peas [under sized peas in the pod] and snap peas [sometimes called sugar snap peas]. Peas belong to the Legume family and are a good vegetable to rotate in your garden plantings as they will 'fix' nitrogen and add it to your soil. In addition to fresh peas are dried peas. Dried peas and fresh peas as a group, are one of the most important agricultural crops worldwide. Minnesota ranks first in the nation for green peas for processing.

Peas grow best in cool weather. They can be planted early in the spring and require about 60 days to be ready for harvest. Harvesting the peas will enable the plant to re-bloom and continue producing pea pods until the weather gets too hot. Savvy gardeners will plant peas again in August to take advantage of the cooler fall weather and harvest a second crop of fresh peas.

your pepper plants until night temperatures average 55 – 60 degrees F. Peppers need plenty of water but do not like saturated roots. Use mulch to retain moist soil and avoid excessive evaporation from the soil during the hot summer months. Use a light fertilizer application such as a 5-10-10 fertilizer prior to transplanting. If necessary, apply a light application of 5-10-10 when blooming starts. Over fertilizing results in lush vegetation and low fruiting.

Like cucumbers and summer squash, peppers are usually harvested at an immature stage. The traditional sweet pepper is harvested green, even though most varieties will mature red, orange or yellow. Peppers can be harvested at any stage of growth, but their flavor doesn't fully develop until maturity. Frequent harvesting increases yields, often at the sacrifice of flavor. If you continually pick the peppers before they mature, the plants continue to produce fruit in their quest to develop viable seed. To avoid this dilemma, plant at least two plants of each variety. Allow one of the plants to fully ripen to maturity and harvest the other throughout the season.

A nutty solution

By Jeff Jensen, Iowa Nut

Growers Association Iowa needs to grow more perennials. In the land of corn and soybeans this could be construed as a controversial statement; but upon deeper investigation is really a no brainer and simply common sense. Perennials, including trees, shrubs, vines, native grasses, cover crops, bioenergy crops, etc. provide a multitude of benefits besides the fruit, biomass, or timber that is the purpose of the crop.

Ecological benefits include: reduced soil erosion from wind and water, enhanced carbon sequestration, wildlife habitat for a multitude of species; including our keystone pollinators, and many more. This is why I'm fond of saying that agriculture needs to provide more than simply food, fuel, feed, and fiber; it also must include ecological function.

Strategically placed perennials on the landscape could significantly improve water quality in the state which consistently ranks among the dirtiest in the U.S. Scientists and researchers at Iowa State University, and other land grant universities, are acutely aware of this potential and are conducting research into strategies, systems, and methods for increasing perennials on the landscape.

ISU for instance, is doing fascinating work with living mulches incorporated between the rows of corn and soybean plantings. In addition, cover crops and work being done at Practical Farmers of Iowa represent low hanging fruit in the quest for added perennials. However, even with all the work underway to understand, develop, and manage perennial systems, in the end perennials only get planted if there is an economic incentive to do

Nut crops, in my humble opinion, are an under utilized option for getting more perennials on the landscape. Species such as hazelnut and hickory can be incorporated into riparian plantings that adjoin surface waters. Multi-species plantings of nut producing trees can be included in field windbreaks and farm shelterbelts. In the age of ever larger row crop farm equipment, areas too small for the machinery or corners of pivot irrigation systems work well for growing nut trees and shrubs.

confinements Hog and feedlots could benefit from nut crops bordering the property; any number of possibilities abound.

While the opportunities are countless, challenges exist. At this point and time chestnuts and black walnut are the only nut crops with commercial potential and documented positive returns. Hazelnuts have tremendous upside potential but as of yet are still under development while superior plants are identified and propagated for future commercial production.

Hickories demand a premium in the marketplace, if you can find them at all, and would benefit from a renewed focus on commercial development. Even pecans, which reach their northern range in the state, have lots of upside especially if the weather we have had this spring becomes more and more common.

Iowa is unique in the number of nut we can grow here. Certainly black walnut is well known and readily prevalent throughout the state, but pecan, hazelnut, chestnut, shagbark & shellbark hickory, heartnut, butternut, buartnut, and others also grow here as well. We would be wise to recognize not only the benefits of perennials, but specifically the opportunities available through nut growing.
Imagine a targeted effort focused on converting even a mere 5% - 10% of our most environmentally sensitive acres from row-crops to perennials like nut crops. The results could be profound and a leading strategy for improving water quality in the state of Iowa. That is an investment that is worth making.

They aren't a great bother in the garden, but I have found that they have a taste for tomatoes, especially cherry tomatoes.

"I'm seeing beautiful purple flowers growing everywhere. What are they?" Dame's rocket, an introduced species, flowers in shades of purple, pink or white on roadsides and wooded edges. This plant, with its heavenly aroma, is often mistaken for wild phlox. Dame's rocket flowphlox has five. Dame's rocket leaves are positioned alternately along its leaves.

"How can I tell a downy ere? here; here; see it? woodpecker from a hairy woodpecker?" They look "When are baby chip-similar, but the downy is the downy's bill is shorter than the length of its head, whereas the hairy's bill is as long its head. The downy is cally two to five babies more commonly seen than the hairy.

> "Why do birds sing so much early in the morning?" It's the dawn chorus because the light is too dim to forage then, but a robust song informs those within hearing that the singer is strong and healthy enough to survive the night, and lets the competition know that bird is still in charge of his territory. Potential mates are attracted to survivors. Go figure.

1 Card of Thanks

Hill - The family of James D. Hill wish to extend our sincere thanks for your many kindnesses and for the condolences and support that we have received during Jim's illness until he passed away. We would like to thank UHD Hospice for their wonderful care and friendship while they cared for him, the many volunteers who sat with Jim, for Dr. Parnell, and also for Fr. Andrew Beerman of St. John Vianney of Fairmont for his spiritual consolation and bringing the sacraments to him, Lakeview Funeral Home for the assistance and help planning the funeral and during the funeral. Thank you for the food, beautiful cards, phone calls, flowers, and the memorials that were sent. The memorials have been sent to the respective recipients. Thanks again. ~The family of James D. tackles for loss.

This coming weekend June 17th the Hawgs head to Lake Benton to take on the west leading Wildcats. The Hawgs look to avenge their only loss on the season a 29-21 loss at home. This game means everything for the Hawgs as more than likely the winner of this game will get the #1 seed in the west and home field throughout the playoffs. We would love to see our fans make the trip over this weekend. To top it off it's Lake Bentons Saddlehorse days. It'll be worth the trip just to experience this atmosphere. Kickoff is at 6 pm at West Side Field, Lake Benton,

All-American Fishing/Casting Contest

It was a beautiful morning for fishing. Thanks to all the parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles and neighborhood friends for bringing out their kids to spend time together while their son, daughter, grandson, granddaughter, niece or nephew participated in the fishing derby. This time spent together with a child is the big payoff to being parent, grandparent or aunt and uncle, but also for being their mentor and friend. Of course an event like this could not have happened without the generous donations and wonderful prizes supplied by community minded businesses.

There were 52 contestants with over 100 in attendance including adults. 124 fish were caught. This event happens every year at this time (first Saturday in June) with the Bass Seekers of Fairmont and the Kiwanis Early Risers group coordinating their efforts to put on this fun packed event.

Thanks to all the helpers from the Bass Seekers, Kiwanis Early Risers, Sentinel and Photo Press as well as all the sponsors for making this a huge success!
