Darwin Anthony, Business Owner, Artist, Writer

I once was the pride and my future would be. joy of his uncle. The uncle liked John Deere tractors. He liked the sound of my sound". He treated me well, for I was "the power of the farm". He kept me in a shed and changed my oil, filters and was careful with me in every way. I always served him well!

I was sold on his farm sale after the uncle died. Neither of his two sons would continue the farming. Even though they continue to own the farm land, they live far from the farm. I was bought at the sale by a collector of old John Deere tractors. I am a 1939 John Deere "A", the first of what is known as the "stylized series". My grill and hood shape had been designed differently. I have a streamlined look. The rest of me was like change in style made me a "classic". The new owner took me home from the sale and parked me at the edge of the grove. He examined me and realized what bad shape I was in. I sat at the edge of the grove for many years. I sensed that I was an eye sore for the owner. My already faded paint faded even more. My tires went flat and my wheels settled into the soft prairie earth. Year after year, I sat waiting. I stood in the long grass of the grove. I sat in the heat of the blazing sun in summer and the deep snow banks in winter. I could feel myself deteriorating year af-

I am sure that the person that he bought me from wondered if he had any idea what poor shape I was in. For some reason, he did not look at all of my faults. He looked at me as something of promise. He saw than the rusty, faded, flattired tractor that I had bereason. He looked at me as was to carry black coffee an old friend. He wanted a to the uncle. I was to look as did not see me as a tractor I once looked when I came from the factory.

So the process began. The friend took me apart piece by piece. He looked, measured and calculated as to what had to be done. My hundreds of smaller pieces were marked and placed in boxes. The larger pieces were scattered in a systematic way on the floor of the friend's shop. Once I had been taken apart, the friend contacted my owner. They would discuss what needed to be done. My owner explained that I was the tractor of his uncle. The uncle had driven me when picking corn at my new owner's parents' farm. The uncle, a very small man, smoked many cigarettes and drank lots of coffee.

The cold November winds of Southern Minnesota would hit the uncle day after day as he drove me as something other me up and down the field pulling a two-row John Deere corn picker. My new come. They were like two eyes watching. They seemed to be looking up waiting for a reply. If so, they were also watching the face of the friend who would be doing the restoration.

My new owner asked his friend what he thought of the project. He replied with, "Darwin, a lot of doing such a project has to do with how much you think of this tractor. If it means a lot to you, then we should proceed with its restoration." I remember the smile which came to the friend when it was announced that they were going to proceed with the restoration. The friend then commented, "Really, I think it would have been a shame to junk out such a classic John Deere." He followed with the comment, "But, it is going to take a lot of work."

My restoration took four years because of the difficulty of obtaining original parts and making them part of my very body. My new owner would come to see me from time to time. He even brought the son of my first owner to see me. I could feel myself change whenever he worked on me. The many parts started to become

Morning Glory Muffins

I love fall weather!

In the fall I say, "Fall is my favorite season." And in the spring I say, "Spring is my favorite season." I guess it's a toss up, but you can't beat this time of year! Now is when we visit apple orchards and bring out our apple recipes.

Years ago we had a bakery downtown called Kiel's that made this fabulous muffin called, "Morning Glory Muffins." They didn't give out the recipe, but I did find one years ago with the same name and it tasted very much the same. I usually double the recipe when I make them and freeze some because they do take a little preparation. I figure if I go to the trouble to grate carrots and apple I might as well make it worth my time!

Morning Glory Muffins:

2 cups flour 1/2 tsp salt 2 tsp baking powder 2 tsp cinnamon Mix together and set aside.

2 cups grated carrots 1/2 cup grated apple 1/2 cup chopped nuts 1/2 cup raisins 1/2 cup coconut combine and set aside. 1 1/4 cups sugar

1/2 cup oil

2 tsp vanilla

Mix eggs, oil, sugar and vanilla. Combine flour, soda, salt and cinnamon and add to egg mixture; stir in remaining ingredients. Fill greased muffin cups 3/4 full. Bake at 350 degrees for about 25 minutes or until tooth pick comes out clean when inserted in the center. Makes approximately 18 muffins

Enjoy the fall and have a great week!

Nature by the yard

by Al Batt

A blue jay did a wonderful imitation of a broad-winged hawk's call. I've heard jays do convincing renditions of redtailed hawks, red-shouldered hawks and Cooper's hawks. I watched a visiting sharp-shinned hawk chase a flicker and a starling. The hawk was a male, smaller than a female. This raptor was the size of a blue jay, compared to a red tailed hawk, which is the size of a football. No harm that I could see in either pursuit. I'm sure a few feathers were ruffled.

Giant ragweeds grew tall. Ragweeds cause fall allergies. Ragweed is in the genus Ambrosia, meaning food of the gods, which was believed to confer immortality.

"How can I stop woodpeckers from hammering on my siding?" Any holes a bird has made should be repaired and painted immediately to avoid inviting more. There are methods to discourage the birds. Sometimes they work. Usually they don't. Some people recommend applying sticky repellents like Tanglefoot to damaged areas. Not a good idea. These products could get on a bird's plumage, impairing its ability to fly and stay warm. They could darken and stain wooden siding and cause dirt to adhere to the surface.

Aluminum foil strips, aluminum pie plates or reflective tape hung from damaged areas may scare away woodpeckers. The strips should be long enough to hang freely and blow in the wind. Windsocks hung from house corners serve the same purpose and may be less intrusive. Handheld windmills could be attached along damaged areas. The motion of the revolving vanes may discourage woodpeckers.

Plastic owls hung from the eaves of a house will frighten woodpeckers for a few days. Birds become have been filled with news reports, photos, and stories about the flooded roads, buildings, and towns across many areas of South Central, Southeast, and Central Minnesota. Historic rainfall amounts occurred in a portion of that region on September 21 and 22, with a large portion of the region receiving 4-6 inches of rainfall, and some areas receiving 10-14 inches of rainfall in a 48 hour period. Nearly every river, stream, and creek in that region has been flooded, and was out of its banks following the heavy rainfall event, causing millions of dollars of damage to homes, roads, bridges, and farm fields. This flooding event is comparable to the severe early Fall flooding in many areas of South Central Minnesota in the September, 2010.

among the worst ever in many areas, was caused by the 4-14 inches of rain across much of the region during the two days. This type of intense rainfall is very unusual in September, and is usually more likely to occur in the Spring and early Summer. Some locations across the region also had strong winds and hail, along with the heavy rains, which caused additional damage to some

The University of Minnesota Research and Outreach Center at Waseca recorded 10.16 inches of rainfall on September 21 and 22, which is likely the highest 48-hour total ever recorded during September, in the over 100-year history of the Waseca site. As of September 22, the U of M research site had recorded a total of 14.37 inches of rainfall in September, which is also the highest on record. The normal precipitation total for September at Waseca is 3.19 inches. The Waseca research site has now rather rapidly in the field,

The past several days received a total of 48.68 especially with warm, inches of precipitation for 2016, which is 40 percent above the normal average precipitation of 34.70 inches for an entire year at Waseca. The Research Center has now recorded 35 inches of rainfall in the past three months, since

Harvest Delays

In addition to the property and infrastructure damage caused by the extreme rainfall and flooding, there will likely be considerable crop loss, along with potential major delays in the 2016 corn and soybean harvest. The corn and soybean fields near any rivers, streams or creeks will likely be a total loss in most of the region, as will most other low lying, poorly drained portions of farm fields. Many of these fields had some The flooding, which is fairly good yield potential prior to the storms and flooding; however, in some locations, portions of these fields had already been damaged from storms and heavy rains back in June.

> Most farmers in Southern Minnesota and Northern Iowa are now dealing with completely saturated soil conditions, which is likely to delay soybean and corn harvest across the entire region. A majority of soybeans in the region will soon be ready to harvest, as will a considerable amount of corn, once field conditions are fit for harvesting. In some areas it will be several days before combining can begin, while in other areas it will take a week or longer of dry conditions for fields to be fit. In many fields farmers will be forced to combine a portion of the field, leaving the balance until the fields dry out.

Soybean harvesting is the number one concern right now for most producers. Once the soybeans are mature, they dry down sunny weather conditions. Once this occurs, the soybean pods can "pop open" in the field prior to harvest. There is also concern regarding the stem strength of the sovbeans that were in partial standing water for several days. If field to harvest the soybeans for a long period, there is potential for considerable field loss during soybean harvest.

The wet field conditions concerns in the region. Some corn has been damaged by strong winds and hail that occurred in severe storms during the 2016 growing season in some locations. The storm-damaged corn, together with a higher than normal incidence of stalk rots, increases the likelihood of more stalk breakage in corn this Fall. This problem will likely increase later in the Fall, especially in fields with considerable amounts of standing water.

The crop damage and harvest delays are especially difficult for affected crop producers that are operators were looking at some very good corn and soybean yield potential for this year's crops in many locations. The soybean yield potential appeared especially solid across the region, with the corn yield potential being a bit more variable. Now, many producers are in a "wait and see" mode regarding corn and soybean harvest, hoping that the yields on a majority of the crop acres are strong enough, in order to offset yield losses in the "enterprise units".

fields and portions of fields that were lost to the heavy rains and flooding.

Crop Insurance Considerations

Farm operators with crop losses need to contact their crop insurance agent prior to harvesting fields with significant crop losses to make sure that those losses are reported and verified. Producers also need to keep good yield records, and follow crop insurance verification procedures, in order to maximize crop insurance conditions remain too wet indemnity payments on damaged crop acres. Crop insurance indemnity payments will vary from farmto-farm, depending on the level and type of insurance coverage that was puralso increase corn harvest chased for the 2016 crop year, and on the final 2016 corn and soybean yields.

Producers facing significant crop losses that have "optional units" for crop insurance policies in 2016 could be in a position to collect considerable crop insurance indemnity payments on farm units with large losses. However, producers that have "enterprise units" for their 2016 crop insurance coverage may have more difficulty verifying sufficient crop losses to gain substantial indemnity payments for the 2016 crop year. "Optional units" insure crops on an individual farm facing very tight profit basis, so a producer can margins in 2016. Farm collect crop insurance indemnity payments on one or two farm units, while not receiving payments on other farm units. "Enterprise Units" require all the crop land of a given crop in a County to show a crop loss, in order to receive crop insurance indemnity payments. Many producers have switched from "optional units" to "enterprise units" in the past few years, due to significant savings in the crop insurance premium costs with

What do football games, fall and blanket scarves have in common? Fashion, of course!

Linus was onto something...

Blanket scarves are the latest craze to hit the fashion scene. The blanket scarf can be oblong, square or rectangular. And they must be oversized.

fit, resulting in an effortless style, perfect for your fall activities. It will keep you warm day or night.

Belt it

Belting your blanket scarf is "oh soooo chic!" This look can be achieved by using an oblong or rectangular scarf. Put the middle of the scarf at the back of your neck, let it fall over your chest and belt it loosely at your waist. Can you say classy!

Square it up

I think the most popular look for this trend will be the square blanket scarf. Simply fold the scarf in half, put the large part of the triangle to your neck, then wrap the two ends of the scarf around your neck to the front of your body. Instant style!

Grab that blanket scarf and get out there and enjoy some fall weather!
